

A choir of many voices

Brand new initiative to unite the world's aspiring journalists

One of the world's leading international volunteer companies, Projects Abroad, has announced the launch of its latest project, a service aimed at connecting aspiring journalists and bloggers across the globe to share their thoughts and opinions on what is going on in their homeland.

The service is called Voices Of The World, and will be released as an online weekly newspaper and magazine. The idea is to provide young people all over the world with a chance to engage in dialogue with people in other cultures and learn about the things that affect them directly, whilst simultaneously providing them with a platform to practice their journalistic expression. The initiative will benefit from Projects Abroad's wealth of experience in organising voluntary journalism placements all over the globe, and will call upon the help of some of its 7,000 annual volunteers in 40 different countries.

Peter Slowe, director and founder of Projects Abroad, explains, "With the aid of Projects Abroad journalism volunteers, students around the world will be encouraged and empowered to discuss topics with their counterparts in other countries." The best of these articles will then be published weekly in Voices Of The World magazine.

For more information on the project, head over to www.voices-of-the-world.org