

Are you aged 17-25 and working with children as part of your volunteer programme?

If the answer is 'Yes', then register for a free training day in London with the British Safety Council. This one-day course will cover personal health and safety for volunteers and also teach you how to deliver basic health and safety to children overseas.

How it works

Volunteers attend a free training day on 19 November 2010 at the British Safety Council in London. Travel expenses will be paid and lunch will be provided.

Volunteers receive important health and safety training, including discussion of the hazards and risks they may encounter while on volunteer placements.

Volunteers take the examination leading to the BSC Level 1 Certificate in Health and Safety at Work, a nationally-recognised qualification.

Volunteers are briefed on how to deliver basic health and safety to children overseas. The British Safety Council aims to reach 3,000 children this year through volunteer programmes.

Benefits to the Children

- Helps keep them healthy and safe at home, at school and in the workplace
- Increased self-esteem through gaining a certificate
- Increased use of language skills

Benefits to the Volunteer

- Important health and safety training
- A nationally-recognised qualification
- Responsibility for communicating the health and safety message to children overseas

To find out more and to reserve a place at a training day, please contact Sebastian Tarnowski at the British Safety Council on 020 8600 1044; e-mail: sebastian.tarnowski@britsafe.org